World Literacy Facts

Female students in Afghanistan proudly display their books donated by IBP!

-According to UNESCO, one billion people in the world are illiterate.

-125 million young children are denied the chance to go to school throughout the developing world today.

-Approximately one in four adults in the developing world are illiterate. Women make up the majority of this population.

"Thanks to the International Book Project the town of Caronay has accomplished one of the most significant changes to better this town in many years. We have built and filled a library. Now the youth have the opportunity to acquire knowledge about many things. Our town feels more united and more energetic to find the best way to offer our children a better future by providing them with books".

Daniel Espinola Jara, Town Librarian in Caronay, Paraguay

The International Book Project

Giving the gift of literacy since 1966

The International Book Project (IBP) was founded in 1966 by Mrs. Harriet Van Meter in Lexington, KY as a non-profit 501 c (3) organization. As an example of the lasting impact one determined person can make, IBP has the unique history of having supplied over five million books worldwide since its beginnings in the basement of Mrs. Van Meter's home.

IBP has grown to offer large sea container shipments of over 20,000 books to large institutions, yet it still retains its traditions of person-to-person diplomacy by sending individually crafted Mail Bags (M-Bag's) of a few dozen books at a time to smaller schools, orphanages, and libraries.

IBP distributes books for institutional use to virtually any location in the world that has access to mail. Many of the requests we receive are funded by donors who, by sponsoring an initial Mail Bag of books, initiate a lifelong inter-cultural dialogue. The resulting global friendship that grows between donors and institutions has been the centerpiece of the International Book Project's mission since its inception. In this way, IBP has made a unique contribution to providing the building blocks of future international stability, while promoting education and literacy through its book donation program in areas of need within the United States and especially the developing world. IBP's latest program, Books as Bridges, a cultural exchange initiative linking Kentucky classrooms with sister institutions abroad, has provided the link to connect young people throughout the world in hopes of fostering understanding and friendship, while providing literacy opportunities through the gift of books.

In 2006, over 800,000 people throughout the United States and the developing world benefited from books distributed by the International Book Project and these books had a value of over five million dollars.
